The most common pitch used by online fraudsters is that they can put a prospect's details straight into the main IELTS database without the prospect taking the test. They typically refer to this as a "database-registered certificate."

From a cybersecurity and administrative perspective, this claim is practically difficult for numerous reasons:

1. Multi-Tiered Security Protocols: The systems used by the British Council and IDP are heavily encrypted and managed by restricted administrative workers. They are not available via external 3rd parties.
2. Biometric Verification: Official test centers catch a photograph, signature, and often finger print information of the prospect on the day of the examination. This biometric information is tied straight to the Test Report Form (TRF). A certificate bought online lacks this validated trail.
3. Institutional Verification: Receiving organizations-- such as universities, visa processing centers, and companies-- do not just trust the paper or PDF certificate handed to them by a candidate. They log into the safe and secure IELTS confirmation website to cross-check the TRF number straight against the central database. If a score is not genuine, it will right away reveal as void or nonexistent.
