

Furniture disassembly is often necessary for moving large items like bed frames, bookshelves, and dressers, but losing track of the screws and hardware can turn reassembly into a frustrating puzzle. A few organizing habits prevent this common headache. Manifest Moving Company shares five effective methods.

1. Use Labeled Plastic Bags

Placing hardware from each piece of furniture into its own labeled plastic bag keeps everything separated and easy to identify later. Manifest Movers in Columbus OH recommend writing manifest movers in columbus oh the furniture name directly on the bag rather than relying on memory.

2. Tape Bags to the Furniture Itself

Taping the labeled bag directly to the corresponding piece of furniture, in a spot that will not scratch the surface, keeps the hardware with the item throughout the move rather than getting separated in a box.

3. Use a Labeled Container for Small Parts

A small parts organizer with multiple compartments works well for households disassembling several pieces of furniture at once, keeping hardware from different items separated in one container.

4. Take Photos Before Disassembly

Photographing furniture before taking it apart provides a helpful reference for reassembly, especially for pieces with complex hardware configurations. A Moving Company in Columbus OH crew handling assembly often Manifest moving services appreciates having this reference available.

5. Keep Instructions with the Hardware

If original assembly instructions are available, storing them with the labeled hardware bag makes reassembly faster at the new home.
