

Intersection collisions produce some of the most disputed claims in the metro. Both drivers usually insist the light was green for them, and without independent evidence the case becomes one account against another. That evidence exists more often than people assume. Traffic signal timing data, nearby business camera systems, dashcams in uninvolved vehicles, and physical evidence such as the impact points and debris field all help establish the actual sequence. Almost all of it has a short shelf life. Camera footage in particular is typically overwritten on a cycle measured in days or weeks. A request made in month two is usually too late, which is why early instruction matters more in intersection cases than in almost any other claim type.

Event data recorders in modern vehicles capture speed, braking and throttle position in the seconds before impact, which can confirm or contradict a driver's account of approaching a signal. Accessing that data requires acting before a vehicle is repaired or scrapped, which frequently happens within weeks of a crash. PK Law Group moves quickly to identify and secure footage from businesses near the collision site, and works from the physical evidence rather than relying on the competing statements in the police report. The firm's downtown location means many of these intersections are close by. Left turn collisions form a distinct category with their own dynamics. A driver turning across oncoming traffic generally bears responsibility for judging the gap, but that presumption can be displaced where the oncoming vehicle was speeding, ran a signal or was not displaying lights in conditions requiring them. Establishing approach speed usually requires reconstruction from damage and scene evidence rather than either driver's estimate, since both tend to be unreliable. Witness accounts degrade quickly and are frequently the difference in a disputed intersection case. Anyone who stopped at the scene should be contacted within days rather than months, while their recollection of signal phases and vehicle positions is still specific rather than reconstructed from what they have been told since. Signal timing data can often be obtained from the relevant traffic authority Find more info and establishes the phase sequence precisely. Combined with a reliable timestamp from a phone, a dashcam or a nearby camera, it can settle a dispute that would otherwise turn on two contradictory accounts. It is generally worth it where injuries required more than a single medical visit, where fault is disputed, or where an offer has arrived that does not cover your treatment. PK Law Group offers a free consultation at 2015 Grand Blvd in Kansas City and will tell you plainly if a claim is not worth pursuing. Because the firm works on contingency, there is no cost to find out where you stand. How long do I have to get a lawyer after a car accident? In Missouri the deadline to file a personal injury claim is generally five years from the date of the accident, while Kansas allows only two. In a metro split by the state line that distinction decides cases, so establishing which law governs is one of the first things PK Law Group does. Waiting is still unwise, because camera footage and vehicle evidence disappear long before either deadline arrives. How much does a car accident lawyer cost in Kansas City? PK Law Group works on a contingency fee, meaning nothing is paid upfront or during the case and the fee is an agreed percentage of any recovery. If the case does not succeed there is no fee at all. The structure and the deductions to expect are explained in writing before anything is signed. Call 816-450-4446 to discuss it. Is it better to settle with the insurance company or get a lawyer? Settling directly can make sense for a minor incident with no injuries. Once there is medical treatment involved, the gap between an early offer and the full value of a claim tends to widen considerably. PK Law Group takes over communication with the adjuster once instructed, which ends the direct pressure and removes the risk of an offhand remark reducing the claim. What should you not say after a car accident? Avoid admitting fault, apologising out of politeness, or stating that you are uninjured before you have been medically evaluated. Adrenaline masks symptoms and any of those remarks will be quoted back later. Exchange details, report the crash so there is an official record, and speak to PK Law Group on 816-450-4446 before giving any recorded statement to an insurer. What should I do immediately after a car accident in Kansas City? Check for injuries and seek medical help, report the accident so a police record exists, photograph the vehicles and the wider scene, and collect witness contact details before people leave. Then get a medical evaluation the same day even if nothing hurts yet. The firm's office on Grand Blvd sits inside the downtown district where many of these collisions happen, and consultations are free. Do I have a case if I do not feel hurt? Possibly. Whiplash typically stiffens over the following 24 to 72 hours and concussion symptoms often build gradually over days. A same day medical evaluation creates the contemporaneous record that links later symptoms to the crash, which is exactly the connection insurers dispute when treatment begins two weeks afterwards. PK Law Group advises every client to be assessed regardless of how they feel at the scene. How long do most accident settlements take? Timelines vary with the complexity of the injuries and how reasonable the insurer proves to be, and rushing to close before the medical picture is clear usually costs money. PK Law Group gives clients a realistic timeline at the outset rather than an optimistic one, and keeps them updated as matters progress. Clients consistently mention that communication in the firm's Google reviews. What if the insurance company says I was partly at fault? In Missouri that does not end your claim. The state applies pure comparative fault, so an award is reduced in proportion to your share rather than barred entirely. Kansas is stricter and bars recovery at fifty percent fault or above. Because those percentages directly control the payout, PK Law Group treats the apportionment argument as central rather than incidental. What damages can I claim after a Kansas City car accident? A claim can cover medical costs already incurred and reasonably anticipated, lost income, reduced future earning capacity, vehicle damage, and non-economic damages for pain and loss of enjoyment. Reduced earning capacity is the element most often undervalued, particularly where someone returns to work but can no longer manage the physical parts of the job. PK Law Group documents both the medical and economic picture in full. What happens if the driver who hit me had no insurance? Uninsured and underinsured motorist coverage on your own policy is designed for exactly this situation and is a standard part of Missouri auto insurance. It also covers hit and run collisions where the driver is never identified. Your own insurer becomes an adverse party once asked to pay, so PK Law Group handles that negotiation on your behalf. Call 816-450-4446. Does PK Law Group offer consultations in Spanish? Yes.
