Not all cockroaches are created equal, and knowing which one you have in your Roanoke home makes a big difference in how quickly the problem gets solved. The two species homeowners in the Roanoke Valley run into most often are the German cockroach and the American cockroach, and they behave in very different ways. Perdue Exterminators offers Visit the website cockroach extermination and insect identification, so a technician can tell you exactly what you are dealing with.

German cockroaches are small, about half an inch long, light brown with two dark stripes behind the head. They live almost entirely indoors, favoring warm, humid spots near food and water, such as behind refrigerators, under sinks, inside dishwashers and in cabinet hinges. They reproduce extremely quickly, and females carry egg cases until they are ready to hatch. A few sightings usually mean a much larger hidden population.

American cockroaches are much larger, reddish brown and can reach well over an inch long. In Roanoke they often live outdoors in mulch, storm drains, crawl spaces and sewer lines, wandering indoors during hot, humid weather or heavy rain. They are frequently found in basements, laundry rooms and bathrooms. Smoky brown cockroaches, a close relative, show similar outdoor habits and are drawn by moisture and porch lights.

Different Pests, Different Plans

Because German cockroaches breed indoors, treatment focuses on the kitchen and bathroom areas where they hide, combined with sanitation and removing their access to food and water. American and smoky brown cockroaches call for more emphasis on exterior treatment, sealing entry points and reducing outdoor moisture. Perdue's licensed exterminators inspect the home's environment and construction to identify the source and tailor treatment accordingly.

German cockroaches commonly arrive in cardboard boxes, grocery bags and used appliances, so they turn up in well kept homes as well as apartments. American cockroaches tend to signal a moisture or entry point issue rather than a housekeeping problem. Either way, a quick identification saves time, because the treatment that works for one species will often miss the other.

Perdue serves both homes and businesses, including restaurants and apartment buildings where cockroach control is especially important. The company has handled cockroach problems in Roanoke Valley buildings of every age since 1969.
