Short answer: The claim needs careful checking. The reported wedding that most closely matches the names in this question is Jeff Bezos and Lauren Sánchez Bezos's 2025 wedding in Venice, Italy—not a wedding on Lanai in October 2026. I can't verify a Los Angeles Times article dated October 12, 2026, reporting a Lanai guest list or identifying Leonardo DiCaprio as a guest. Without a verifiable article, it would be misleading to attribute those details to the newspaper.

The question may also be mixing together separate strands of celebrity coverage: Bezos and Sánchez Bezos's high-profile wedding, DiCaprio's name appearing in celebrity-guest reporting, and actor Tobey Maguire's unusually private personal life. Maguire is relevant to the Spider-Man-era earnings and marriage timeline often bundled into searches about this subject—but that does not establish that he officiated a Lanai ceremony or that the Los Angeles Times reported a particular guest list.

What can—and can't—be established about the headline

The phrase "los angeles times oct 12 2026" points to a specific publication and date. A reliable answer should be based on the article itself, an archived copy, or another trustworthy report quoting it. I can't confirm that such a Los Angeles Times story exists or verify the alleged Lanai guest list. So claims that the paper named a " leonardo dicaprio guest," or that it described a wedding officiant, should be treated as unconfirmed unless the original article can be produced.

There is, however, a well-documented event that may explain the confusion: Bezos and Sánchez Bezos married in Venice in June 2025. Their celebration drew extensive entertainment and society coverage, and Leonardo DiCaprio was among the famous names associated with the event in press reports. That is different from proving that DiCaprio attended a Lanai wedding in October 2026—or that the Los Angeles Times reported he did.

It also matters that "Lanai wedding" is not a minor spelling variation of "Venice wedding." Lanai is a Hawaiian island; Venice is an Italian city. A story about one cannot safely be retold as a story about the other. Until a verifiable source establishes a separate Lanai event, the most responsible conclusion is that the question may conflate locations, dates, or stories.

Why Tobey Maguire enters the conversation

Maguire is often pulled into online discussions involving DiCaprio because the two actors have been friends for decades and have appeared in one another's social circles. Maguire also has a personal timeline that attracts interest: a major movie-star career, a long marriage to jewelry designer Jennifer Meyer, a separation, a divorce, and a notably civil relationship afterward. Those facts are independently reportable, but they do not confirm the alleged wedding headline.

His Spider-Man success offers a useful example of how fame and public visibility do not always travel together. Maguire became the face of a major global franchise, yet he has generally kept a lower profile than many actors with comparable blockbuster recognition. That contrast helps explain why searches about his private life can become tangled with more visible celebrity events.

Spider-Man earnings and worldwide box office

Maguire starred as Peter Parker in Sam Raimi's three-film Spider-Man series, released between 2002 and 2007. The films made him a global star and helped establish the modern superhero blockbuster as a major force in Hollywood. Their worldwide grosses are a measure of the franchise's commercial reach—not a direct measure of what Maguire personally earned.

Film Release year Reported worldwide box office What the figure means Spider-Man 2002 About $825 million Global ticket sales for the first film, not Maguire's salary Spider-Man 2 2004 About $789 million Worldwide theatrical gross, not personal earnings Spider-Man 3 2007 About $895 million Worldwide theatrical gross, not personal earnings

These rounded totals are commonly reported in film databases such as Box Office Mojo and The Numbers; figures can vary by database, re-release treatment, and later reporting. The key point is scale: the trilogy grossed billions of dollars worldwide in total, making it one of the defining commercial superhero series of its era.

Salary figures reported for Maguire are less uniform. Entertainment outlets have commonly cited a fee of roughly $4 million for the first film and a substantially larger payday—often reported around $17.5 million—for Spider-Man 2. Estimates for Spider-Man 3 also vary, particularly when reports discuss bonuses or participation rather than a simple base salary. These should be treated as reported estimates, not audited contract records.

Earnings or financial item Reported example Important context Spider-Man salary Often reported at about $4 million Media-reported figure; contract details are not publicly audited Spider-Man 2 salary Often reported at about $17.5 million Reported compensation, distinct from the film's box-office gross Spider-Man 3 compensation Reports vary Base salary and possible additional compensation may be conflated Estimated net worth example $75 million estimated net worth (2026) Illustrative estimate, not a verified financial disclosure

The $75 million figure should be read as an estimate, not a confirmed balance sheet. Celebrity-net-worth websites and entertainment summaries typically infer wealth from reported salaries, investments, property, and career activity. They generally do not have access to a person's complete assets, debts, taxes, or private business arrangements.

A private public image despite blockbuster fame

Maguire's star-making role made him recognizable around the world, but he has not maintained the nonstop publicity profile associated with some leading actors. He has continued acting and producing, while keeping much of his family life out of interviews and social-media spectacle. "Low-profile" does not mean that he is unknown; it describes a comparatively restrained public presence beside the scale of his fame.

That reserve can create a vacuum in which vague claims spread easily. A named guest, a celebrity friendship, or an old photograph may be used to imply attendance at an event without showing that the person was there. Good reporting separates confirmed attendance from speculation, and it distinguishes a newspaper's own reporting from details repeated by other outlets.

Marriage, separation, divorce, and friendship

Maguire married Jennifer Meyer in 2007. Meyer is a jewelry designer, and the couple had two children. In October 2016, they announced that they were separating after nine years of marriage. Their public statement emphasized their commitment to raising their children together, setting a relatively measured tone for coverage of the split.

Meyer filed for divorce in 2020, and the divorce was finalized later that year. The end of the marriage did not become a prolonged public feud. In subsequent interviews and public appearances, Meyer has spoken warmly about Maguire and described their ongoing relationship in friendly, family-centered terms. They have continued to co-parent, and Meyer has at times called him her best friend. That is a meaningful part of the story—but it is not evidence about a wedding guest list.

Personal detail Reported information Former spouse Jennifer Meyer, jewelry designer Marriage 2007 Separation announced October 2016 Divorce filing and finalization Meyer filed in 2020; the divorce was finalized in 2020 Family relationship after divorce Reportedly amicable, with continued co-parenting and friendship Public profile Famous actor who generally keeps his personal life relatively private

Where Jeff Bezos and Lauren Sánchez Bezos fit

The keyword phrase “jeff bezos lauren sanchez bezos” points to a separate, highly public story. The couple’s 2025 Venice wedding attracted major attention because of their wealth, celebrity connections, and the scale of the celebrations. DiCaprio was among the prominent names discussed in coverage of that event. But a celebrity’s appearance in reporting about a Venice celebration should not be transferred to a different island, a different date, or a different article without evidence.

Likewise, a headline about an officiant—if one is being circulated—does not by itself establish who attended. An officiant and a guest are different roles. To answer the original question accurately, a reader needs the article’s exact wording, not a social post that paraphrases or blends multiple reports.

How to verify the alleged October 12, 2026 report

1. Search the newspaper’s archive. Look for the exact date, headline, and the terms “Lanai,” “guest list,” and “DiCaprio.”
2. Check the byline and publication details. Confirm that the item is a Los Angeles Times article, rather than a search snippet, repost, or another outlet’s story.
3. Compare the location and date. Separate reporting on the 2025 Venice wedding from any alleged 2026 event in Hawaii.
4. Look for independent confirmation. If multiple reputable outlets report the same guest list, compare their wording and sourcing.
5. Do not treat a name as proof of attendance. Being mentioned in connection with a couple or a celebrity circle is not the same as being confirmed at a wedding.

Bottom line

The safest answer to "what did the Los Angeles Times say about the Lanai wedding guest list?" is: the specific October 12, 2026 report and its alleged guest list cannot be verified here, so no list should be attributed to the newspaper without the original article. The better-established story is Bezos and Sánchez Bezos's 2025 Venice wedding, which was covered separately and associated in celebrity reporting with guests including DiCaprio.

Maguire's Spider-Man earnings, his films' worldwide box-office impact, his low-profile image, and his amicable post-divorce relationship with Meyer are all useful background. They should remain background, though—not substitutes for evidence about a Lanai wedding or what a newspaper actually published.

FAQ: Quick answers

Did the Los Angeles Times publish a Lanai wedding guest list on October 12, 2026?

I can't verify that article or its contents. The date and claimed details should be checked against the newspaper's archive or a confirmed copy of the story.

Was Leonardo DiCaprio a guest at the Lanai wedding?

That specific claim is unconfirmed. DiCaprio has been associated in press coverage with Bezos and Sánchez Bezos's 2025 Venice wedding, but that does not prove attendance at a separate Lanai event.

Did Jeff Bezos and Lauren Sánchez Bezos marry on Lanai?

The widely wikibiography.in reported 2025 wedding took place in Venice, Italy. That established event should not be described as a Lanai wedding.

What was Tobey Maguire's reported Spider-Man salary?

Entertainment reports commonly cite about $4 million for the first film and around $17.5 million for the second. These are reported estimates, not publicly audited contract figures.

Are Tobey Maguire and Jennifer Meyer on friendly terms after divorce?

Public statements and interviews have described their relationship as amicable and focused on co-parenting. Meyer has spoken warmly about Maguire since their divorce was finalized in 2020.

Is $75 million a confirmed net-worth figure for 2026?

No. “$75 million estimated net worth (2026)” is an estimate, not an official disclosure. Public net-worth figures should be treated cautiously.