The Northgate area has transformed significantly since the light rail extension opened, and the mix of older single-family homes, new apartment buildings, and commercial properties creates a range of plumbing service needs that Salish Plumbing Co serves throughout the neighborhood. From plumbing repairs in older homes east of I-5 to water heater service and drain cleaning for newer residential and commercial properties, Salish brings its usual standard of honest, well-priced work to the Northgate area. Older homes in the Northgate area share the galvanized supply pipe and clay sewer lateral characteristics of Seattle's broader mid-century residential stock. Sewer camera inspection is particularly worthwhile for homes near the mature street trees along the area's older blocks, where root intrusion into clay laterals is a well-documented problem. Salish provides camera inspection as a standalone service or as part of a broader diagnostic visit when recurrent drain issues suggest a main line problem. New residential construction in the Northgate area, driven by the light rail-adjacent development boom, creates demand for new construction plumbing services that Salish handles as part of its broader service scope. Salish coordinates permit applications, rough-in inspections, and finish plumbing for new projects in the
